INTRODUCTION

It would be impertinent to present this, the work of one librarian, as a bibliography of basic stock. My own literary and bibliographical knowledge is far too limited to support any such assertion, and I fully realize that no fellow librarian would produce quite the same list. I hope, however, that this select list of what I believe to be some significant and not unrepresentative books may prove useful in public libraries and particularly in the smaller ones. I may add that the present list formed, in very large measure, the basic non-fiction stock of the Dover Public Library. Reasonable success in introducing it locally prompts me to offer it to a wider public. At the same time every title in the bibliography has been considered afresh and it has, of course, been brought up to date.

It will be noted that I omit reference books, children's books, works of prose fiction, musical scores, foreign texts and the specialised English county literature. The demands for foreign texts and musical scores vary widely from place to place, miniature scores being a particularly difficult problem, and the provision of county literature, in all but representative outline, also depends upon locality. Many of the best books, e.g. Derry's "Across the Derbyshire moors " are also published locally. Select lists of prose fiction and of reference books for the small municipal library might well form the subjects of other lists, although the recent publication of "Library stock and assistance to readers," by L. R. and E. R. McColvin, already greatly simplifies the selection of reference books.

I do not claim that the three thousand books listed here should be in all public libraries, but I believe that most of them will be found useful in most libraries. Since it is normally desirable to provide an initial stock of wide general appeal and to expand it as future demand indicates, it is hoped that the librarians of new authorities may find my list useful to them during the satisfying but exhausting task of drawing up the first stock lists. Older libraries may also, perhaps, use it as a check list of books, old and new.

I have, in the selection of titles and editions, been influenced much more by considerations of potential utility than by cost. Even the smallest library can justify the purchase of such expensive books as Lemos's "Applied Art," and Ellis's "Modern Practical Carpentry," while the Cannan edition of Adam Smith and the Bury edition of Gibbon tolerate no substitutes. The standard abbreviations for well-known series such as "English Men of Letters " and "Home University Library," have been used throughout.

Absolute impartiality in book selection is a premise of professional ethics and, be it added, one of the most elusive of human ideals. I have sought to display as many points of view as possible in order that the entire bibliography may present a miniature, but still faithful, likeness of our civilization. The "weighting" of the classes and divisions has been done to a plan of experienced demand, largely inarticulate, the construction of which preceded selection. I may add that the regular use of stock turnover statistics has greatly aided me both in my everyday work at Dover and in the preparation of this list. I am well aware that my experience may differ considerably from that of other librarians, but not, I believe, in essentials. It is necessary to add, however, that a bibliography such as this soon develops a personality of its own and insists upon a voice in its own shaping. The inner ears of the bewildered compiler soon become quite deafened by the clamour of indignant protests from books which he had presumed to leave out. Biography proved extremely refractory in this respect, and although the complete list of it is longer than planned, I have not the heart to remove any part of it, as I know quite well that any revision in cold blood will undoubtedly increase rather than diminish its length. Special attention has been paid throughout to the inclusion of introductory, elementary and more advanced works in all subjects which seemed to justify it here. Since so much of the most vital educational work of any public library must include the initiation of the masses into their heritage of civilization, the introductory works are particularly emphasised.

The arrangement throughout is, in broad outline, that of the thirteenth edition of the Dewey Decimal classification save that subjects which are normally divisible into two or more parts by strict use of the divisions of the 300 and 600 classes in particular have not been broken up. History and geography are grouped together, and biography forms a separate class, containing also letters and criticism in one alphabetical sequence by biographee. My first seven years as a library worker were spent with the Brown Subject classification and I have developed a strong objection, which hardens with the passing of time, to any other arrangement of these subjects. Thus may the Jesuit, and the modern psychologist, justify themselves in a new way !

I have endeavoured to examine all accessible and relevant bibliographical material and have received special assistance from the Library Association's "Books for Youth," the "What to Read" booklets of the Leeds Public Libraries, the bibliographies issued by the County Libraries section of the Library Association, and the booklists from the National Book Council. A wide variety of other material consulted has ranged from the A.S.L.I.B. "Select List of Standard British Scientific and Technical Books." to notes culled from the requirements of numerous W.E.A. classes. While I have sought to be accurate in bibliographical detail and have used the 1938 edition of the "Reference Catalogue of Books" carefully with this object, I have not hesitated to omit sub-titles which seemed valueless in a buying list. That, above all else, is the purpose of this volume.

Lord Macmillan has written—"My own experience convinces me that there is no branch of knowledge which does not at one time or another prove of service to the lawyer in his practice. He comes into contact with every kind of human activity and the wider his knowledge, the better he is able to advise and guide his clients." * Substitute librarian for lawyer and we have but one satisfactory justification of wise learning as a basic professional need. Hence my enthusiasm in compiling the present list is much sobered by the reflection that my own goblet of Pierian water is of scanty size. Nevertheless, if the present imperfect list proves of value to my fellow librarians, I shall be well content.
